President Obama addressed the nation's future need for "middle skill" workers in his education speech. A new study from "Skills to Compete Oregon" agrees that jobs like police officers, firefighters, therapists, nurses and medical technicians will be in demand. The study predicts 340,000 job openings within the next decade in Oregon...52% of those jobs require more than a high school diploma, but less than a 4-year degree. "Green" jobs will be big too with Oregon's push to be the epicenter of green building.
