

United States

The Forgotten Middle

Middle-skill jobs, which require more than high-school, but not a four-year degree, make up the largest part of America's labor market. Key industries are unable to find enough sufficiently trained workers to fill these jobs.

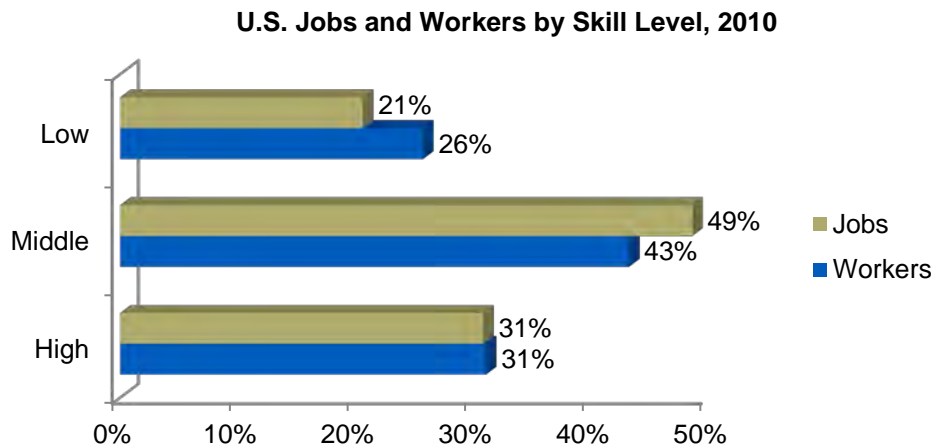

Demand for Middle-Skill Jobs Will Remain Strong in America

Source: Calculated by NSC from Bureau of Labor Statistics data

America's Skills Mismatch: A Middle-Skills Gap

In 2010, about 49 percent of America's jobs were in middle-skill occupations. But only 43 percent of U.S. workers likely had the appropriate training for these jobs.

Source: Calculated by NSC from Bureau of Labor Statistics data and the June 2010 Current Population Survey